

About the author of this book:

WALTER HAVIGHURST, born on Thanksgiving Day in Appleton, Wisconsin, was educated in Illinois, Ohio, Colorado and England. As a sailor in the United States Merchant Marine, he traveled around the world before becoming a Professor of English at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio. He has written novels, biographies and books of regional history. Among his books for younger readers are Song of the Pines, a story of lumbering in Wisconsin; Climb a Lofty Ladder, a story of Swedish settlement in Minnesota; and George Rogers Clark, a frontier biography.

About the illustrator of this book:

JOHN C. WONSETLER turned to books and drawing as his favorite pastimes even as a small boy. Directly after high school he entered the Philadelphia Museum's School of Art where he graduated in 1925 with a first prize in illustration. For the next five years he taught in this same art school.

After gaining nationwide prestige as a mural painter, Mr. Wonsetler turned to the work which had always interested him most—illustrating books for children. Since then he has done a great deal of distinguished work in this field.
