

About the author of this book:

SAMUEL HOPKINS ADAMS was graduated from New York's Hamilton College. His career there was more notable as an athlete than as a student, since it was he who introduced football to the campus, played tackle on Hamilton's first team, and won the inter-collegiate tennis championship. In recognition of these contributions to scholarship, his college conferred upon him the degree of L. H. D. in 1926. In the sixty years since Mr. Adams left the college groves, he has held front rank among popular American writers. He has authored more than forty books, and seventeen of his stories have appeared, more or less mangled, in the movies. Mr. Adams lives on his quarter-mile of lakeside, "Wide Waters," near Auburn, New York.

About the illustrator of this book:

EDWARD SHENTON, a native of Pottstown, Pennsylvania, is the illustrator of more than a hundred books and many magazine stories. He is also the author of two novels, five books for boys, and short stories in the Saturday Evening Post, Collier's, Cosmopolitan and other leading magazines. Mr. Shenton and his wife live in a 1760 stone house near West Chester, Pennsylvania.
