ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I received kind help in my work on this book. Thanks to:

Dr. Phil Smith for the material from the New England Journal of Medicine, Mr. David Kohl for the outline of the fifth grade English course at Logos School which I used in planning, Mr. Kohl's fifth graders of 1990-91 for their good, intelligent work which helped set the pace for the book, my colleagues during my years at Logos for the blessing it was to work with them, Doug Jones and Courtney Huntington and the other folks at Canon Press for their work, my private students Nichole, Rachel, Julie, Matthew, and Megan who helped keep my Latin fresh, Georgetown College Library, Georgetown, Kentucky, for the sharing of their books, Mrs. Julie Garfield for welcome advice on at least one occasion, Mrs. Anna Roode, my parents, and my mother-in-law for giving me time to work, my husband, Jeff, for encouraging me and giving extra help with our children James, Lauren, MaryGlen, and Susan, and the Lord Jesus for all his good gifts.

C) PISCIS IS A WORD YOU LEARNED IN THE FIRST BOOK WHICH MEANS _____.
THERE IS A NICE COLLECTION OF LATIN WORDS RELATED TO PISCIS :

piscator, piscatorius, piscatus, pisciculus, piscina, piscinarius, piscor, and piscosus.

You can tell whether they are nouns, verbs, or adjectives by how they are listed in a Latin dictionary. By using a dictionary, write each word, its definition, and the other information that you have learned about it on a line in the correct group. You will probably not recognize the verb from its Latin forms because it is a kind of verb that you have not learned about yet, but look for an English meaning that shows action. Piscis is done as an example.
