

AMONG THE FARMYARD PEOPLE

THE BIG GOBBLER CAME PUFFING TOWARD HER

AMONG THE FARMYARD PEOPLE

BY
CLARA DILLINGHAM PIERSON

Illustrated by F. C. Gordon

YESTERDAY'S CLASSICS CHAPEL HILL, NORTH CAROLINA

Cover and arrangement © 2008 Yesterday's Classics, LLC.

This edition, first published in 2008 by Yesterday's Classics, an imprint of Yesterday's Classics, LLC, is an unabridged republication of the work originally published by E. P. Dutton and Company in 1899. For the complete listing of the books that are published by Yesterday's Classics, please visit www.yesterdaysclassics.com. Yesterday's Classics is the publishing arm of the Baldwin Online Children's Literature Project which presents the complete text of hundreds of classic books for children at www.mainlesson.com.

ISBN-10: 1-59915-281-9

ISBN-13: 978-1-59915-281-3

Yesterday's Classics, LLC
PO Box 3418
Chapel Hill, NC 27515

TO THE CHILDREN

Dear Little Friends:

I want to introduce the farmyard people to you, and to have you call upon them and become better acquainted as soon as you can. Some of them are working for us, and we surely should know them. Perhaps, too, some of us are working for them, since that is the way in this delightful world of ours, and one of the happiest parts of life is helping and being helped.

It is so in the farmyard, and although there is not much work that the people there can do for each other, there are many kind things to be said, and even the Lame Duckling found that he could make the Blind Horse happy when he tried. It is there as it is everywhere else, and I sometimes think that although the farmyard people do not look like us or talk like us, they are not so very different after all. If you had seen the little Chicken who wouldn't eat gravel when his mother was reproving him, you could not have helped knowing his thoughts even if you did not understand a word of the Chicken language. He was thinking, "I don't care! I don't care a bit! So now!" That was long since, for he was a Chicken when I was a little girl, and both of us grew up some time ago. I think I have always been more sorry for him because when he was learning to eat gravel I was learning to eat some things which I did not like; and so, you see, I knew exactly how he felt. But it was not until afterwards that I found out how his mother felt.

That is one of the stories which I have been keeping a long time for you, and the Chicken was a particular friend of mine. I knew him better than I did some of his neighbors; yet they were all pleasant acquaintances, and if I did not see some of these things happen with my own eyes, it is just because I was not in the farmyard at the right time. There are many other tales I should like to tell you about them, but one mustn't make the book too fat and heavy for your hands to hold, so I will send you these and keep the rest.

Many stories might be told about our neighbors who live out-of-doors, and they are stories that ought to be told, too, for there are still boys and girls who do not know that animals think and talk and work, and love their babies, and help each other when in trouble. I knew one boy who really thought it was not wrong to steal newly built birds'-nests, and I have seen girls—quite large ones, too—who were afraid of Mice! It was only last winter that a Quail came to my front door, during the very cold weather, and snuggled down into the warmest corner he could find. I fed him, and he stayed there for several days, and I know, and you know, perfectly well that although he did not say it in so many words, he came to remind me that I had not yet told you a Quail story. And two of my little neighbors brought ten Polliwogs to spend the day with me, so I promised then and there that the next book should be about pond people and have a Polliwog story in it.

And now, good-bye! Perhaps some of you will write me about your visits to the farmyard. I hope you will enjoy them very much, but be sure you don't wear red dresses or caps when you call on the Turkey Gobbler.

Your friend,

CLARA DILLINGHAM PIERSON.

STANTON, MICHIGAN,

March 28, 1899.

CONTENTS

THE STORY THAT THE SWALLOW DIDN'T TELL . . .	1
THE LAMB WITH THE LONGEST TAIL. . . . .	9
THE WONDERFUL SHINY EGG. . . . .	16
THE DUCKLING WHO DIDN'T KNOW WHAT TO DO . . . . .	24
THE FUSSY QUEEN BEE . . . . .	34
THE BAY COLT LEARNS TO MIND. . . . .	44
THE TWIN LAMBS. . . . .	55
THE VERY SHORT STORY OF THE FOOLISH LITTLE MOUSE. . . . .	63
THE LONELY LITTLE PIG . . . . .	70
THE KITTEN WHO LOST HERSELF . . . . .	77
THE CHICKEN WHO WOULDN'T EAT GRAVEL .	90
THE GOOSE WHO WANTED HER OWN WAY. . .	98

WHY THE SHEEP RAN AWAY . . . . .	106
THE FINE YOUNG RAT AND THE TRAP . . . . .	114
THE QUICK-TEMPERED TURKEY GOBBLER . . . . .	123
THE BRAGGING PEACOCK . . . . .	131
THE DISCONTENTED GUINEA HEN . . . . .	141
THE OXEN TALK WITH THE CALVES . . . . .	152

THE STORY THAT THE SWALLOW DIDN'T TELL

“LISTEN!” said the Nigh Ox, “don’t you hear some friends coming?”

The Off Ox raised his head from the grass and stopped to brush away a Fly, for you never could hurry either of the brothers. “I don’t hear any footfalls,” said he.

“You should listen for wings, not feet,” said the Nigh Ox, “and for voices, too.”

Even as he spoke there floated down from the clear air overhead a soft “tit-tle-ittle-ittle-ee,” as though some birds were laughing for happiness. There was not a cloud in the sky, and the meadow was covered with thousands and thousands of green grass blades each so small and tender and yet together making a most beautiful carpet for the feet of the farmyard people, and offering them sweet and juicy food after their winter fare of hay and grain. Truly it was a day to make one laugh aloud for joy. The alder tassels fluttered and danced in the spring breeze while the smallest and shyest of the willow pussies crept from their little brown houses on the branches to grow in the sunshine.

AMONG THE FARMYARD PEOPLE

“Tittle-ittle-ittle-ee! Tittle-ittle-ittle-ee!” And this time it was louder and clearer than before.

“The Swallows!” cried the Oxen to each other. Then they straightened their strong necks and bellowed to the Horses, who were drawing the plow in the field beyond, “The Swallows are coming!”

As soon as the Horses reached the end of the furrow and could rest a minute, they tossed their heads and whinnied with delight. Then they looked around at the farmer, and wished that he knew enough of the farmyard language to understand what they wanted to tell him. They knew he would be glad to hear of their friends’ return, for had they not seen him pick up a young Swallow one day and put him in a safer place?

“Tittle-ittle-ittle-ee!” and there was a sudden darkening of the sky above their heads, a whirr of many wings, a chattering and laughing of soft voices, and the Swallows had come. Perched on the ridge-pole of the big barn, they rested and visited and heard all the news.

The Doves were there, walking up and down the sloping sides of the roof and cooing to each other about the simple things of every-day life. You know the Doves stay at home all winter, and so it makes a great change when their neighbors, the Swallows, return. They are firm friends in spite of their very different ways of living. There was never a Dove who would be a Swallow if he could, yet the plump, quiet, gray and white Doves dearly love the dashing Swallows, and happy is the Squab who can get a Swallow to tell him stories of the great world.

THE SWALLOWS ARE COMING

AMONG THE FARMYARD PEOPLE

“Isn’t it good to be home, home, home!” sang one Swallow. “I never set my claws on another ridge-pole as comfortable as this.”

“I’m going to look at my old nest,” said a young Swallow, as she suddenly flew down to the eaves.

“I think I’ll go, too,” said another young Swallow, springing away from his perch. He was a handsome fellow, with a glistening dark blue head and back, a long forked tail which showed a white stripe on the under side, a rich buff vest, and a deep blue collar, all of the finest feathers. He loved the young Swallow whom he was following, and he wanted to tell her so.

“There is the nest where I was hatched,” she said. “Would you think I was ever crowded in there with five brothers and sisters? It was a comfortable nest, too, before the winter winds and snow wore it away. I wonder how it would seem to be a fledgling again?” She snuggled down in the old nest until he could see only her forked tail and her dainty head over the edge. Her vest was quite hidden, and the only light feathers that showed were the reddish-buff ones on throat and face; these were not so bright as his, but still she was beautiful to him. He loved every feather on her body.

“I don’t want you to be a fledgling again,” he cried. “I want you to help me make a home under the eaves, at a lovely little nest of mud and straw, where you can rest as you are now doing while I bring food to you. Will you?"

THE STORY THAT THE SWALLOW DIDN'T TELL

"Yes," she cried. "Tittle-ittle-ittle-ee! Oh, tittle-ittle-ittle-ee!" And she flew far up into the blue sky, while he followed her, twittering and singing.

"Where are those young people going?" said an older Swallow. "I should think they had flown far enough for to-day without circling around for the fun of it."

"Don't you remember the days when you were young?" said the Swallow next to him.

"When I was young?" he answered. "My dear, I am young now. I shall always be young in the spring-time. I shall never be old except when I am moulting."

Just then a family of Doves came pattering over the roof, swaying their heads at every step. "We are so glad to see you back," said the father. "We had a long, cold winter, and we thought often of you."

"A very cold winter," cooed his plump little wife.

"Tell me a story," said a young Dove, their son.

"Hush, hush," said the Father Dove. "This is our son," he added, "and this is his sister. We think them quite a pair. Our last brood, you know."

"Tell us a story," said the young Dove again.

"Hush, dear. You mustn't tease the Swallow," said the mother. "They are so fond of stories," she cooed, "and they have heard that your family are great travellers."

AMONG THE FARMYARD PEOPLE

“But I want him to tell us a story,” said the young Dove. “I think he might.”

This made the Swallow feel very uncomfortable, for he could see that the children had been badly brought up, and he did not want to tell a story just then.

“Perhaps you would like to hear about our journey south,” said he. “Last fall, when the maples began to show red and yellow leaves among the green, we felt like flying away. It was quite warm weather, and the forest birds were still here, but when we feel like flying south we always begin to get ready.”

“I never feel like flying south,” said the young Dove. “I don’t see why you should.”

“That is because I am a Swallow and you are a farmyard Dove. We talked about it to each other, and one day we were ready to start. We all had on our new feathers and felt strong and well. We started out together, but the young birds and their mothers could not keep up with the rest, so we went on ahead.”

“Ahead of whom?” said the young Dove, who had been preening his feathers when he should have been listening.

“Ahead of the mothers and their fledglings. We flew over farms where there were Doves like you; over rivers where the Wild Ducks were feeding by the shore; and over towns where crowds of boys and girls were going into large buildings, while on top of these buildings were large bells singing, ‘Ding dong, ding dong, ding dong.’”

THE STORY THAT THE SWALLOW DIDN'T TELL

“I don’t think that was a very pretty song,” said the young Dove.

“Hush,” said his mother, “you mustn’t interrupt the Swallow.”

“And at last we came to a great lake,” said the Swallow. “It was so great that when we had flown over it for a little while we could not see land at all, and our eyes would not tell us which way to go. We just went on as birds must in such places, flying as we felt we ought, and not stopping to ask why or to wonder if we were right. Of course we Swallows never stop to eat, for we catch our food as we fly, but we did sometimes stop to rest. Just after we had crossed this great lake we alighted. It was then that a very queer thing happened, and this is really the story that I started to tell.”

“Oh!” said the young Dove and his sister. “How very exciting. But wait just a minute while we peep over the edge of the roof and see what the farmer is doing.” And before anybody could say a word they had pattered away to look.

The birds who were there say that the Swallow seemed quite disgusted, and surely nobody could blame him if he did.

“You must excuse them,” cooed their mother. “They are really hardly more than Squabs yet, and I can’t bear to speak severely to them. I’m sure they didn’t mean to be rude.”

“Certainly, certainly,” said the Swallow. “I will excuse them and you must excuse me. I wish to see a few of my old friends before the sun goes down. Good afternoon!" And he darted away.

AMONG THE FARMYARD PEOPLE

The young Doves came pattering back, swaying their heads as they walked. "Why, where is the Swallow?" they cried. "What made him go away? Right at the best part of the story, too. We don't see why folks are so disagreeable. People never are as nice to us as they are to the other young Doves."

"Hush," said their mother. "You mustn't talk in that way. Fly off for something to eat, and never mind about the rest of the story."

When they were gone, she said to her husband, "I wonder if they did hurt the Swallow's feelings? But then, they are so young, hardly more than Squabs."

She forgot that even Squabs should be thoughtful of others, and that no Dove ever amounts to anything unless he begins in the right way as a Squab.

THE LAMB WITH THE LONGEST TAIL

THE Sheep are a simple and kind-hearted family, and of all the people on the farm there are none who are more loved than they. All summer they wander in the fields, nibbling the fresh, sweet grass, and resting at noon in the shadow of the trees, but when the cold weather comes they are brought up to the farmyard and make their home in the long low Sheep-shed.

That is always a happy time. The Horses breathe deeply and toss their heads for joy, the Cows say to each other, "Glad to have the Sheep come up," and even the Oxen shift their cuds and look long over their shoulders at the woolly newcomers. And this is not because the Sheep can do anything for their neighbors to make them warm or to feed them. It is only because they are a gentle folk and pleasant in all they say; and you know when people are always kind, it makes others happy just to see them and have them near.

Then, when the cold March winds are blowing, the good farmer brings more yellow straw into the Sheep-shed, and sees that it is warm and snug. If there are any boards broken and letting the wind in, he mends them and shuts out the cold. At this time, too, the Horses and Cattle stop often in their eating to listen. Even the Pigs, who do not think much about their neighbors, root in the corners nearest the Sheep-shed and prick up their ears.

AMONG THE FARMYARD PEOPLE

Some bleak morning they hear a faint bleating and know that the first Lamb is there. And then from day to day they hear more of the soft voices as the new Lambs come to live with the flock. Such queer little creatures as the Lambs are when they first come—so weak and awkward! They can hardly stand alone, and stagger and wobble around the little rooms or pens where they are with their mothers. You can just imagine how hard it must be to learn to manage four legs all at once!

There is one thing which they do learn very quickly, and that is, to eat. They are hungry little people, and well they may be, for they have much growing to do, and all of the food that is to be made into good stout bodies and fine long wool has to go into their mouths and down their throats to their stomachs. It is very wonderful to think that a Cow eats grass and it is turned into hair to keep her warm, a Goose eats grass and grows feathers, and a Sheep eats grass and grows wool. Still, it is so, and nobody in the world can tell why. It is just one of the things that are, and if you should ask "Why?" nobody could tell you the reason. There are many such things which we cannot understand, but there are many more which we can, so it would be very foolish for us to mind when there is no answer to our “Why?”

THE LAMB WITH THE LONGEST TAIL

Yes, Sheep eat grass, and because they have such tiny mouths they have to take small mouthfuls. The Lambs have different food for a while,—warm milk from their mothers’ bodies. When a mother has a Lamb to feed, she eats a great deal, hay, grass and chopped turnips, and then part of the food that goes into her stomach is turned into milk and stored in two warm bags for the Lamb to take when he is hungry. And how the Lambs do like this milk! It tastes so good that they can hardly stand still while they drink it down, and they give funny little jerks and wave their woolly tails in the air.

There was one Lamb who had a longer tail than any of the rest, and, sad to say, it made him rather vain. When he first came, he was too busy drinking milk and learning to walk, to think about tails, but as he grew older and stronger he began to know that he had the longest one. Because he was a very young Lamb he was so foolish as to tease the others and call out, “Baa! Your tails are snippy ones!”

Then the others would call back, “Baa! Don’t care if they are!”

After a while, his mother, who was a sensible Sheep and had seen much of life, said to him: “You must not brag about your tail. It is very rude of you, and very silly too, for you have exactly such a tail as was given to you, and the other Lambs have exactly such tails as were given to them, and when you are older you will know that it did not matter in the least what kind of tail you wore when you were little.” She might have told him something else, but she didn’t.

THE LAMB WITH THE LONGEST TAIL

THE LAMB WITH THE LONGEST TAIL

The Lamb didn’t dare to boast of his tail after this, but when he passed the others, he would look at his mother, and if he thought she wouldn’t see, he would wiggle it at them. Of course that was just as bad as talking about it, and the other Lambs knew perfectly well what he meant; still, they pretended not to understand.

One morning, when his mother’s back was turned, he was surprised to see that she had only a short and stumpy tail. He had been thinking so much of his own that he had not noticed hers. “Mother,” he cried, “why didn’t you have a long tail too?”

“I did have once,” she answered with a sheepish smile.

“Did it get broken?” he asked in a faint little voice. He was thinking how dreadful it would be if he should break his.

“Not exactly,” said his mother. “I will tell you all about it. All little Lambs have long tails——”

“Not so long as mine, though,” said he, interrupting.

“No, not so long as yours,” she replied, “but so long that if they were left that way always they would make a great deal of trouble. As the wool grows on them, they would catch burrs and sharp, prickly things, which would pull the wool and sting the skin. The farmer knows this, so when the little Lambs are about as old as you are now, he and his men make their tails shorter.”

AMONG THE FARMYARD PEOPLE

“Oh!” cried the Lamb, curling his tail in as far between his legs as he could, “do you mean that they will shorten my tail, my beautiful long tail?”

“That is just what I mean,” said his mother, “and you should be very glad of it. When that is done, you will be ready to go out into the field with me. A lot of trouble we should have if the men did not look after such things for us; but that is what men are for, they say,—to look after us Sheep.”

“But won’t they laugh at me when my tail is shorter?” asked her son.

“They would laugh at you if you wore it long. No Lamb who pretends to be anybody would be seen in the pasture with a dangling tail. Only wild Sheep wear them long, poor things!”

Now the little Lamb wished that he had not boasted so much. Now, when the others passed him, he did not put on airs. Now he wondered why they couldn’t have short tails in the beginning. He asked his uncle, an old Wether Sheep, why this was and his uncle laughed. “Why, what would you have done all these days if things happened in that way? What would you have had to think about? What could you have talked about?” The little Lamb hung his head and asked no more questions.

“What do you think?” he called to a group of Lambs near by. “I’m going to have one of the men shorten my tail. It is such a bother unless one does have it done, and mine is so very long!”

THE LAMB WITH THE LONGEST TAIL

